Discussion Session

The workshop had two essential components. The first consists of lectures on approaches to qualitative research based on theoretical presentations, and the second was tuned to the development of practical skills in the preparation of project proposals based on experiences of the participants. Professor Bridges of the University of East Anglia has shown interest in collaborative research.

In his formal report to the British Council, the professor made the following remarks about the workshop and the future plan of IER.

"The training workshop was a qualified success... the workshop during this visit was handled (very efficiently) by the Director and staff of the Institute of Educational Research. I see every advantage in treating the Institute, for our purposes as an integral part of the link between UEA and AAU. In particular the participation of the Institute in the link is likely to assist UEA's interest in establishing some joint, externally funded project".

IER hopes that Michael Sergeant, Director of the British Council, will do something about the intended link.
